

Performance Task Item: (Paired Text) “Forever –Is Composed of Nows –” and “Enigmatic Dickinson Revealed Online”

Grade Level: English II

Focus Areas: Reading Literature; Reading Information; Narrative Writing

Essential Question: How does art reflect life?

Learning Targets:

- Students will identify and explain how textual evidence supports what the author states directly and what he/she implies.
- Students will identify the theme or central idea of a text.
- Students will explain how a theme is developed by specific details.
- Students will identify and show support for the author's tone through multiple words and phrases in the text.
- Students will analyze how an author uses structure to create effects such as mystery, tension, or surprise.
- Students will read a variety of texts on one subject and identify how they are similar and how they are different.
- Students will write a well-structured, detailed narrative about real or imagined events or experiences.

STANDARDS

Content Standards:

- Cite strong and thorough textual evidence to support analysis of what the text says explicitly as well as inferences drawn from the text.
- Determine a theme or central idea of a text and analyze in detail its development over the course of the text, including how it emerges and is shaped and refined by specific details; provide an objective summary of the text.
- Determine the meaning of words and phrases as they are used in the text, including figurative and connotative meanings; analyze the cumulative impact of specific word choices on meaning and tone (e.g., how the language evokes a sense of time and place; how it sets a formal or informal tone).
- Analyze how an author's choices concerning how to structure a text, order events within it (e.g., parallel plots), and manipulate time (e.g., pacing, flashbacks) create such effects as mystery, tension, or surprise.
- Determine an author's point of view or purpose in a text and analyze how an author uses rhetoric to advance that point of view or purpose.

- Write informative/explanatory texts to examine and convey complex ideas, concepts, and information clearly and accurately through the effective selection, organization, and analysis of content.

Supporting Standards:

- Demonstrate command of the conventions of Standard English grammar and usage when writing or speaking.
- Demonstrate command of the conventions of Standard English capitalization, punctuation, and spelling when writing.

Materials/Resources:

4. What is the tone of the poem? Analyze the impact of specific words/phrases on the tone. (DOK 2/3)

5. What is unusual about the format of the poem? What effect does this have on the meaning of the poem? What effect does it have on the reader? (DOK 2)

6. The phrase, “Anno Dominies”: A.D. is time measured from Christ's birth; beginning of the era of Christ. What does this mean in the poem and what can you infer from it? (DOK 2)

Part C:

9. Complete the graphic organizer below with evidence from the poem and the article.
(DOK 2/3)

... By leaving out most of Dickinson’s so-called scraps (as scholars somewhat reluctantly call the fragments from after 1875, when she seems to have stopped copying out clean versions of poems), along with passages from letters not included in Mr. Franklin’s edition but identified by other experts as poems, the archive plays down Dickinson’s evolution toward more radically experimental forms, some scholars assert.

“She was continually challenging the boundaries of genre,” said Marta Werner, a professor at D’Youville College in Buffalo and the creator of “Radical Scatters,” a 1999 digital project based on the scraps, which are mostly held by Amherst. “She was someone who wrote all the time, and by the end she was writing on everything.”

10. You are Emily Dickinson. Compose a narrative in which you reflect on your writing. Include details from her bio, the poem, and the article. Engage the reader by establishing a point of view, using precise words and phrases, telling details, and sensory language. (DOK 4)

Emily Dickinson's daguerreotype, circa 1846

EMILY DICKINSON was born in Amherst at the Homestead on December 10, 1830. Her quiet life was infused with a creative energy that produced almost 1800 poems and a profusion of vibrant letters.

Her lively Childhood and Youth were filled with schooling, reading, explorations of nature, religious activities, significant friendships, and several key encounters with poetry. Her most intense Writing Years consumed the decade of her late 20s and early 30s; during that time she composed almost 1100 poems. She made few attempts to publish her work, choosing instead to share them privately with family and friends. In her Later Years Dickinson increasingly withdrew from public life. Her garden, her family (especially her brother's family at The Evergreens) and close friends, and health concerns occupied her.

With a few exceptions, her poetry remained virtually unpublished until after she died on May 15, 1886. After her death, her poems and life story were brought to the attention of the wider world through the competing efforts of family members and intimates.

'Forever – Is Composed of Nows –'

(L1640)

By Emily Dickinson

Forever – is composed of Nows –

'Tis not a different time –

Except for Infiniteness –

And Latitude of Home –

From this – experienced Here –

Remove the Dates – to These –

Let Months dissolve in further Months –

And Years – exhale in Years –

Without Debate – or Pause –

Or Celebrated Days –

No different Our Years would be

From Anno Dominies –

The manuscripts of Emily Dickinson have long been scattered across multiple archives, meaning scholars had to knock on numerous doors to see all the handwritten drafts of a poet whose work went almost entirely unpublished in her lifetime.

The online Emily Dickinson Archive, to be inaugurated on Wednesday, promises to change all that by bringing together on a single open-access website thousands of manuscripts held by Harvard University, Amherst College, the Boston Public Library and five other institutions. Now, scholars and lay readers alike will be able to browse easily through handwritten versions of favorite poems, puzzle over lines that snake along the edges of used envelopes and other scraps of paper, or zoom in on one of Dickinson’s famous dashes until it almost fills the screen.

... Since planning began two years ago, there has been a revival of decades-old tensions between Harvard and Amherst, which hold the two largest Dickinson collections. And sometimes-bitter debate has flared on the advisory board, with some members saying that Harvard’s choice of which materials to include provides too narrow an answer to a basic question: Just what counts as an Emily Dickinson “poem,” anyway?

“The scholarship with any major figure produces factions and divisions,” said Christopher Benfey, a Dickinson scholar at Mount Holyoke College, who is not involved with the project. “But with Dickinson, the truly bizarre thing is the quarrel has been handed to generation after generation after generation.”

The trouble began when Dickinson died, in 1886, leaving behind just 10 published poems and a vast and enigmatic handwritten paper trail, ranging from finished-seeming poems assembled into hand-sewn books to fragments inscribed on advertising fliers, envelope flaps, brown household paper, even a chocolate wrapper.

After finding a cache of writings in a locked chest, Dickinson’s sister Lavinia gave them first to Susan Dickinson, the wife of their brother, Austin, to organize and publish. When Susan worked too slowly, the papers went to Austin’s mistress, Mabel Loomis Todd, who helped edit the first published edition of Emily Dickinson’s poems. Todd subsequently claimed ownership to some manuscripts, furthering a long-running legal dispute called “the war between the houses.”

Material from Austin's descendants went to Harvard in 1950, while Todd's material went to Amherst in 1956. Since then, there have been tensions over copyright and boasting over whose collection is bigger and better.

... By leaving out most of Dickinson's so-called scraps (as scholars somewhat reluctantly call the fragments from after 1875, when she seems to have stopped copying out clean versions of poems), along with passages from letters not included in Mr. Franklin's edition but identified by other experts as poems, the archive plays down Dickinson's evolution toward more radically experimental forms, some scholars assert.

"She was continually challenging the boundaries of genre," said Marta Werner, a professor at D'Youville College in Buffalo and the creator of "Radical Scatters," a 1999 digital project based on the scraps, which are mostly held by Amherst. "She was someone who wrote all the time, and by the end she was writing on everything."

Such matters may seem irrelevant to people who come to the website for the sheer pleasure of looking at Dickinson's often startlingly beautiful manuscripts (some festooned with dried flowers or doodles), or comparing the poems as they appeared in her handwriting to printed versions in six published editions, including Mr. Franklin's.
